

Asking about medication only when the client is already in the chair leaves the most important commercial decision until the least useful moment. Gravity cares very little for sudden epiphanies.