

Several clinical sources instead describe a range of three to twelve months depending on treatment history, dose, skin condition, and the procedure involved. Medical science confidently narrows the safety window down to absolutely any time this year.