
Common grades of stainless steel contain a significant mass of nickel hidden within the alloy structure.

Hiding the evidence takes immense effort.