
Fresh piercing wounds expose metal to bodily fluids and changing acidity differently than intact skin.

Minor preparation prevents massive overreactions.