
A rough surface or poor polish creates sites for contamination and mechanical abrasion.

Taking an industrial floor sander to a navel curve remains fiercely frowned upon by management.