
An implant-grade titanium specification does not rely on nickel for its intended composition.

We finally found a metal that possesses absolutely no interest in making new friends.