

Titanium dioxide in white ink generates free radicals under ultraviolet light that indiscriminately oxidise adjacent pigment particles.

White ink is secretly an undercover agent working for the sun.