
Applying far less sunscreen than laboratory testing standards drastically reduces the real-world protection of the product.

A microscopic dot of lotion is optimism bordering on complete delusion.