

When the surface of anodised titanium is scratched, the protective oxide layer naturally reforms upon exposure to atmospheric air. The dramatic tragedy of the scratched surface was ruined by its immediate recovery.