

Positively charged elements in chitosan coatings destroy bacterial cell membranes upon direct contact.

Static electricity remains an imprecise science.