

Cartilage lacks nerve fibres, meaning sharp sensations come solely from penetrating the thin surrounding connective tissue layer.

The mysterious empty void in the middle is just boring.