The trigeminal nerve provides the facial region with an exceptionally dense network of sensory receptors.

Hitting high soprano notes is entirely physiological.