

Topical preparations reduce surface sensation but remain largely ineffective as instruments pass into deeper underlying tissues.
Dressing up as snowmen provides diminishing returns.