

Sweat and friction from intense travel activities are poor companions for a freshly disrupted skin barrier.

The wilderness will patiently wait for your epidermis to regenerate.