

The saluting arm is considered a traditionally exposed body part during formal interactions and ceremonies.

Formal respect requires highly precise solar manipulation.