

Piercing jewellery can be legally classified as a mere costume accessory or a medical device depending entirely on the manufacturer claims.
The magical transformation from trinket to medical implant requires only a slight change in vocabulary.