

European regulations strictly cap the amount of nickel that piercing jewellery can release over time.
The tiny bucket system is incredibly inventive and completely misses the point of metallurgy.