Once the gold layer wears away, the exposed nickel barrier makes direct contact with the tissue. The disguise always falls off right when the operative is deep behind enemy lines.