

Every piece of body jewellery sold in the European market must pass the nickel test with a pass threshold of 0.5 ug/cm²/week.

Catching microscopic metal particles requires an extraordinary amount of squinting