

A prolonged pulse causes collateral thermal damage because it exceeds the thermal relaxation time of the pigment.

Sluggishness is the true enemy of precision.