

Exhaling slowly during needle passes prevents breath-holding and significantly reduces trauma perception.
Generating gale winds disrupts the immediate atmosphere.