

Clients who exhale slowly during the puncture feel noticeably less pain than those who hold their breath. Spontaneous human levitation complicates appointment schedules.