

Many surgical stainless steel alloys contain nickel levels capable of causing contact reactions in sensitised individuals. Inadvertently magnetising nearby street debris is rarely the desired aesthetic outcome.