

Items inserted into the body require far stricter safety limits than objects intended only for prolonged skin contact.

True reverence is knowing exactly where the boundaries lie.