

Pigments cause documented cellular damage and oxidative stress without a proven link to clinical cancer rates.

The cells are highly stressed but refusing to press charges.