

Small rooms with hard ceilings and tiled floors reflect noise so efficiently that moving away from the machine offers almost no relief. Retreating to the far corner provides excellent stretching but absolute disappointment.