

Tattoo machines with failing internal bearings screech at harsh high frequencies long before the motor actually stops working.

Ruining a perfectly serene afternoon with the shriek of unlubricated metal.