

Detecting a substance within a laboratory setting does not constitute evidence of harm when applied to the human dermis.

At least the squid feels thoroughly vindicated.