

Blanket prohibitions on hypothetical services give institutions the appearance of risk management without measuring actual hazards. Aggressively outlawing ghosts remains an incredibly efficient way to meet local safety quotas.