

Human vision detects familiar biological shapes before consciously analyzing intricate artistic details. The brilliant artistic vision was instantly defeated by a basic anatomical resemblance.