

The brain rapidly compares silhouettes, curves and familiar proportions against stored visual patterns.

Inner peace is accepting that everyone else thinks your majestic tiger is a weird potato.