

Existing pigment remains optically active because the skin scatters light.

The past refuses to stay buried under white ink.