

Scar tissue from repeatedly reworked areas does not accept new pigment predictably.

The human crust remains entirely undefeated against mere needles.