

Vacuum-melted steel is cleaner than standard grades but still relies on a nickel-bearing alloy.

Pristine manufacturing cannot erase the inherent chemistry of the base metals.