

Traditional appearance and a sacred setting do not excuse poor infection control or serve as a biological sterilization method.

Assuming that holy incense smoke instantly vaporizes bloodborne pathogens requires a profound misunderstanding of microbiology.